The FAMOUS

A CHEERFUL LIFE

A Wholesome Sermon on the Value and Usefulness of the Doctrine of Great Humor.

"The sad old earth must borrow its mirth,

It has sorrow enough of its own."

A woman who has always lived on a farm and whose life was made of constant toil, repeated failures due to drouth, and sickness, says the American Farmer, (though she would have had no failure in Potter county on the first score and but little on the latter) explains why she was always cheerful, in this manner:

"You know I have had no money, and have had nothing I could give but myself, so I made the resolution I would never sadden anyone else with my troubles. I have laughed and appeared cheerful when my heart was breaking; I have always smiled in the face of every misfortune, I have tried never to allow anyone to go from my presence without a happy word or a bright thought to carry with them; and as happiness makes happiness, I am happier myself than I would have been had I sat down and bemoaned my fate"

No one can properly estimate the cheerful woman whose cheerfulness is not too much affected by dark days or little disappointments, or whose kindness does not become rancid in the midst of prosperity. The magnetism of the cheerful woman's smiles and brightness infects every one in the darkest hours. The husband goes to his work feeling that he is part of the world, and that he can contribute himself, heart and soul, to advancement. The work of the day will tire and worry him, but the thought of the peace and comfort in the home across the field, renews his strength and energy and he endures to the end.

The cheerful mother sends her children to school with the sense of something to be won, a work to be accomplished, and they do not find it very difficult to be brave, courteous, truthful and just, obedient to teacher, kind to schoolmates.

A low-spirited, fault-finding wife can kill the last bit of hope and enthusiasm remaining in a troubled heart, while the cheerful, hopeful one lends courage to press on or to begin over again with a "heart for any fate."

The prime requisite to the success of the farm is cheerfulness. The mother who allows the blues and sulks to overshadow the home, who allows herself to be moody and discontented, falls in a chief duty and places a handicap upon her husband and children in the race of life.

Cheerfulness is largely a matter of cultivation, for each heart has its own bitterness, each one of us has trouble, trials and vexations; not one but has some grief. It is a selfish woman who broods over her sorrow, and her fits of despondency and moodiness throw a shadow over the household.

Let us "right about face" and ascertain if our influence is helping or hindering the lives of others. Are we making those about us happier, stronger, braver and truer? Or, are they made less hopeful and less courageous? We do not wish to add to another's burden, or make the atmosphere of those dear to us unpleasant. The law of love is the law of life and we recoil when we are told that we are doing others a positive injury. Is it not a sin to go through life with a frown upon the lips? Does this not discourage, does it not make life harder and place obstruction in the path of our friends? If we commence the day by fault-finding, or with a sullen silence which is worse, we have commenced the day in sin. Some people fall into the rut of complaining and all their conversation is about their ills, their miseries, the disheartening things, real or imaginary, while we should talk about the pleasant, the cheerful things of life.

"Talk happiness. The world is sad enough Without your woes. No path is wholly rough.

Look for the places that are smooth and clear,

And speak of those to rest the weary ear

Of earth, so hurt by our continuous strain

Of human discontent and grief and pain."

It's a silly Goose that Comes to a Fox's Sermon.

The Presence of God.

God is everywhere and in everything. His mystery is in every bud, and blossom, and leaf, and tree, in every rock, and hill, and vale, and mountain, in every spring, and rivulet, and river. The rustle of His wing in every zephyr; its might is in every tempest. He dwells in the dark pavilions of every storm-cloud. The lightning is His messenger, and the thunder His voice. His awful tread is in every earthquake and on every angry ocean, and the Heavens above us teem with His myriads of shining witnesses. The universe of solar systems, whose wheeling

The Town Without Trees.

A town without trees and grass may be a town of industry and activity, but with its barren streets and cheerless yards, hot and dusty in summer and cold and forbidding in winter, it is not a town of attractive homes or inviting appearance, pleasing and restful to the eye and inspiring content and cheerfulness, says the Nashville American. Where the beauties of nature are altogether eliminated an unsatisfying condition is created. The love of the beautiful is often unconscious and should be developed and encouraged, because it has a practical as well as aesthetic value. Even a barn or a warehouse should be built with a due regard for harmony, proportion and restful lines. Cleanliness and beauty are necessary to the best thought and action. Trees, parks, grass lawns, statues, flowers, attractive lawns, yards and gardens, clean streets—these are surroundings that lead to a higher appreciation of beauty in its multitudinous forms and contentment of individuals and communities.

Man's Unreasonableness.

Is often as great as woman's. But Thos. S. Austin, manager of the "Republican," of Leavenworth, Ind., was not unreasonable, when he refused to allow the doctors to operate on his wife, for female trouble. "Instead," he says, "we concluded to try Electric Bitters. My wife was then so sick, she could hardly leave her bed, and five [5] physicians had failed to relieve her. After taking Electric Bitters, she was perfectly cured, and can now perform all her household duties." Guaranteed by L. O. Thompson & Bros., druggists, price 50c. 36Ft

Texas's New Game Law.

The quail season opened Nov. 1, and since that time many sportsmen have taken advantage of the open season and are enjoying some fine hunting, especially in the Panhandle and portions of western Texas. The new law governing hunting in this State is causing much trouble and resulting in many arrests among hunters who are not familiar with the provisions of the law. Under the provisions of the new law it is an offense for any one to hunt in a man's field without first obtaining permission. It is not at all necessary that the old sign "Posted, keep out", be placed on the gate or fence this year. As there are comparatively but few people acquainted with the new law it is expected that from now on until the close of the hunting season many complaints of unlawful hunting will be filed in the courts.
